Windows 7 Light Theme is the concept of branding Windows for its light weight, with a focus on intuitive usability and to empower its users, giving them greater control over their devices, instead of the traditional consumer-oriented approach of pushing the user towards certain manufacturer-branded wallpapers. The theme is the first user-centric wallpapers for Windows 8, which tend to be more striking, and the first of this nature since Windows Vista. For example, the default settings for the Windows 8 Metro UI, which is the interface of the desktop replacement Windows 8, show the background as being a very light grey; the settings in the control panel for desktop mode, which puts the desktop interface back into Windows 7, show it as having an orange tint. The theme is currently found to have been reported on to be a mod for the unofficial steam beta for Windows 8, which allows the user to use the original Windows 8 interface that wasn't made by Microsoft. Some versions are currently being sold in the developers section on the official Windows forums. Video Preview Download Windows 7 Light Theme links will be sent to your mail.
