Freaky Farley is an example of backyard filmmaking at its finest. It was shot in New Hampshire for about $10,000. According to star/writer/producer/composer Matt Farley, the majority of that went towards film and I love that this was shot on film. It looks great and perfectly captures autumn in New England. Farley's synth and piano heavy score is also a highlight. A goofy romp about a fake zombie that gets duped as a real vampire, tells it like it is as a far-out comedy about gender and abuse. The movie is about coming to terms with who you are at your most authentic. Exquisitely shot, well paced thriller that plays kind of like a live action Gremlins before the release of the actual movie. Part of the fun of this picture is watching it and trying to figure out why everyone's so weird. (Full Series) 'Star Trek' franchise, on-screen and behind the scenes, with the shorts, reality shows and Comic-con tours, all wrapped together. Fun, though totally detached from the characters of the show. If you like it's kind of like having a behind the scenes and extras DVD thrown in with the set of 'Star Trek' series. Maybe not as enticing as that 'Star Trek' stuff, but I'll take what I can get when it comes to this. Lifetime Studios January 12th, 2011. Thirty-two minutes total. It's 13 minutes. It's pure genius. Bright. Juicy. Tight. But the shots of Freaky Ali's fully clothed belly in profile, rubbing against a black bra, are juuuuust a wee bit too revealing. Cross the line too far and you may have to endure a visit to Mamata's Room.
