forge - virtual tabletop[crack] <http://www.h5station.co> you thought that the way to make a friend was to talk to them, you may be in for a surprise. A recently published study from University College London has shown that if you connect to your friends through social media, you're more likely to develop feelings of love for them than if you do it through physical contact. According to the researchers behind the study, this is because social media allows for "empathic resonance" with someone. When you're face-to-face, it's harder to understand another person's moods, especially when they don't show it to you. The same is true for how we connect with our friends. Because of this, if we're not paying attention to them, it's easier for us to notice any changes in their moods. On social media, though, we can easily see changes in someone's mood because we can see their posts on our feeds. This makes it easier to pick up on them. As an added benefit, the researchers discovered that when we connect with our friends through social media, we're also more likely to put ourselves in their shoes. Because we can see how they feel, we're able to adopt their perspective. That's why they call this "empathic resonance." Can you be empathic with your friends? " f988f36e3a
