In recent years, distributed processing using computers has been considered. The distributed processing is, for example, processing of dividing a computer into two or more computers, so that the whole processing can be made faster and on a larger scale than a case where a single computer is utilized. The distributed processing is disclosed in, for example, John Opel, et al., "Brokering Peer-to-Peer Computing Systems with PEX," Proceedings of PVM/PVM, October 2001, p. 299-309, "Wise," "Many Eyes: Estimating Resource Requirements of Distributed Dataflow Programming," Proceedings of PVM/PVM, October 1999, p. 257-266, etc. Further, there is a method for defining data in each node, and allocating the data in the data center in such a way that the data can be accessed at high speed. This is, for example, processing described in Transaction Processing: Concepts and Techniques, 3rd Edition, Part II
